

En-suite success

Creating the perfect flow from your bedroom to your bathroom can be tricky but by giving your en-suite thought and planning, you can create a fashionable yet functional space.

USING space effectively within your en-suite will give an airy feel, and there are plenty of new design ideas and trends emerging to take you effortlessly from one room to the next.

Lisa Jepson, director at Willbond Bathroom Centres, says: "Today, most modern homes feature an en-suite bathroom to the master bedroom, and it's important that these two rooms feel connected with a running theme throughout.

"En-suite bathrooms don't have to be plain and simple because of their smaller size – there are different ways you can add a dash of style." ■

WET AND WONDERFUL

Wetrooms are becoming the norm for stylish and hassle-free contemporary showering, especially when your bathroom is on the smaller side.

Get the sleekest wetroom look by matching your walls and floor.

Tiles are the obvious choice – ceramic is ideal or alternatively mosaics, limestone and marble for a breathtaking and luxurious option.

If you want the wetroom look but your budget won't stretch to waterproofing (tanking) your bathroom walls and floor, then a composite low-profile shower tray in a dark colour is the answer.

OPEN PLAN LIVING SPLASH OF COLOUR

If you have a windowless en-suite bathroom, why not think a little 'outside of the box' and remove the wall between your bedroom and bathroom altogether, or add a glass partition.

This instantly creates the illusion of more space as well as giving your home the wow factor. Bathroom furniture has also become so sleek and stylish, why hide it behind walls?

New acrylic panels for the walls instead of tiles are a clever, cost effective alternative to glass. They will add a beautiful splash of colour to any space and, because they look like glass, they ooze that expensive, classy look as well as making the room feel bigger.

Match the panels to the colour theme of your bedroom to keep the flow between the two spaces.
